U.S. Army Recruiting and COVID-19

Some recruits, aka Future Soldiers, will receive active-duty pay ahead of initial training instead of leaving on their scheduled Basic Combat Training ship date.

“Parents are sending us their sons and daughters, and we have an obligation to take care of them,” said Army Chief of Staff Gen. James C. McConville, to Pentagon reporters Friday. “Many of these young men and women were expecting to go to work. So they've quit their jobs to go ahead and serve – we're very cognizant of that.”

Paying them is “the right thing to do,” said Maj. Gen. Frank Muth, commanding general of U.S. Army Recruiting Command. This comes as officials announce more than 1,400 recruiting stations will shift to exclusively virtual operations to stop the spread of COVID-19.

Instead of in-person communicating, recruiters will use virtual tools like social media, text messaging, video chats, and even online gaming, Muth said. He added that he is confident in the Army's ability to operate in a virtual space, especially as virtual communication has already become a primary method of talking with potential Soldiers.

As a precautionary measure, recruiters are pre-screening all future Soldiers who are within 15 days of shipping to BCT, officials said. Recruits with increased risk factors or showing symptoms are directed to contact a medical provider and be evaluated, and they must be cleared by Military Entrance Processing Station professionals before shipping.

This could result in a delay in shipping to the training base, officials said. The length of the delay will depend on how long it takes the individual to be free of any symptoms to ensure the future Soldier does not have COVID-19. It will also depend on training seat availability.
